

THE AUGUST UPDATE

Two months since the last update. I've done better, and I've done a whole lot worse. But I feel less guilty about it this time around due to the existence of my weblog which I've managed to keep full of new content on a regular basis. And while on this topic, I want to point out a couple things for your consideration. Yes, these email updates are still valuable and necessary and I will continue to send them out, but I strongly recommend your visiting my website for a better feel of what happens in our little corner of Goa. I think it's a better format that allows for smaller pieces of information more frequently instead of the email update that tends to be heavy on pages and too much information all at once. For this reason, you will notice these email updates decreasing in page size. And to make things a little more exciting, I now have the pleasure of directing you to the site's new location!

My good friends, Nathan and Amanda Warden, were getting fed up with the extra steps required to type in "greetingsfromgoa.blogspot.com (the previous site location) so they figured a clever way to get involved would be to set up the new site location. And I agree with them. Who wants to type in those extra eight letters when it's really not needed? God bless Blogspot.com, but it's time for a change. This will also offer more room for later improvements to the site. And, if you still haven't visited the site, here's the link, again.

But seriously, if you are ever wondering, "I wonder...", wonder no more! Just drop by at greetingsfromgoa.com to get caught up quick and easy. Let's move on.

Since last writing in early June, quite a bit has happened. In June, Hephzibah and I had our marriage ceremony in Karnataka, John and Deena had their wedding in Goa in July and in August I took a short trip to Nepal and North India! That's three biggies! Three really great things, but they also managed to eat up a lot of everyone's time and energy. I have posted pretty extensively on these topics on my site so instead of repeating myself too much, I will focus on the aftermath.

Firstly, I did get my needed stamps to stay in India for 6 more months. Many people have been wondering about the possibility of me not having to leave India anymore after getting married. That's true and requires some more working out of the formalities on our part. It was cutting things too close before my time expired this time around so I made my fast exit to Nepal. What an interesting trip it was! Visiting a new country, then heading west to visit with Dana and Judy Crider and Marietta Smith in Mussoorie. And such good timing! Jay and Judy Smith and family were also visiting the Criders at the same time. Then on the way back to Goa I took a pit stop near Delhi to visit with Amos and Rowena Stoltzfus who I know from my time working with Eastern Mennonite Missions in Harrisburg, Pa. Then back home. Too short of a trip.

Now in Goa, we're trying to get everything back in proper order, especially at the center. This is the first week that all the monsoon-time leaders will be in the same place in three months! All the big events have required a whole lot of traveling from everyone. It's good to be back as a group. And the group is larger for obvious reasons. This upcoming month will be an interesting time of learning to work together with new people. Should be great.

On October 7th my parents, Dan and Karen, return to Goa for another six months. This time they'll be accompanied by Genevi and Danielle Books (cousins, not sisters). This will be the first time for my parents to meet Hephzibah. Should be quite interesting considering I had not even met her the last time they were in Goa. One more change is that when they arrive, Hephzibah and I will also be relocating to a new place. Our new room will be in between two villages; Colva where the center is and Benaulim where my parents stay.

Ok, that's a lot of bits and pieces. And I think I'm going to keep this email short by excluding photos this time around, or maybe this is only to further encourage you to visit my site. Hmmm??? Let me provide the link because I think I forgot to do it earlier...
